

In Need of a Social Perspective

- Did mass hoarding and panic buying happen in your home country during the COVID-19 pandemic?

~ In fact, it did. Unfortunately, the underprivileged in some cities did not have the money nor access to the most sort-after daily necessities like food and toilet paper, and the priority to hoard these products was given to the privileged class.

- Why does national education play a role in the cultivation of civic-mindedness?

~ National education aims to cultivate a sense of belonging and sharedness among citizens, thus they feel they have a sense of ownership. The country belongs to everyone living in it and that every citizen has the obligation to provide genuine care to the country. This is rudimentary to citizens' civic-mindedness.

- How does a person's "social perspective" define that person's social behaviours?

~ A person having a healthy "social perspective" is more inclined to behave in ways that benefit the community as a whole. He or she envisions a fair and harmonious society through the contributions of everyone's fair share of effort. This kind of person is not egotistical and would choose vocations that ensure the greater good of society.
